Graduate School assistantships are awarded each year on a competitive basis following highly qualified applicants are appointed to major department or program. Each nominee is evaluated by applying the same standards used on the applicant’s academic record, test scores, recommendations, and other pertinent information. Assistantships offer students stipends and/or tuition reimbursement for a department up to 20 hours per week while providing a working environment usually more than a typical job. Stipends are in the form of housing, research support, clinical experiences, and teaching assistantships.

In some cases, assistantships and teaching assignments are located in the Graduate Student Center (UGA Commons) to provide a research environment.

For more detailed information, please visit the Graduate School's website or contact the Graduate School's office.
